Hospitality and Tourism

Fundamental to the U.S. economy, hospitality and tourism:

- includes food service, lodging, recreation as well as travel and meeting planning
- relies on workers with technical and interpersonal skills
- is an established and growing industry across the nation

What jobs are available in hospitality and tourism?

Lodging and hospitality is projected to add between 1 million and 2.5 million jobs by 2018 as the industry expands. Jobs for managers and food and beverage service occupations are expected to increase by 15 to 18 percent through 2018, with occupations that require on-the-job training are also projected to grow. Jobs in recreation and gaming as well as in food and beverage service are expected to grow, and meeting and convention planning jobs are set to experience a 20 percent increase through 2018. In addition, opportunities are expanding rapidly for interpreters, who work in this sector organizing and guiding travel, tours and events.

Many employees in the field work part-time and earn less than the national median wage of $14.20. However, there are occupations that earn more than $15,000 per year, such as chefs and food service managers. In the lodging and leisure, a director of club/sports can earn $100,000. Hospitality and tourism also offer an important entry into the world of work for people of various career interest for their first job in the industry as an entry-level position.

By 2018, 40 percent of jobs in this sector will go to workers with at least some postsecondary education, particularly in the middle skills category, requiring associate-level training. About half have a bachelor's degree or higher. Industry regional distributions are concentrated in major regions, such as the Travel & Tourism Association's (TTA) "Hot Regions for the Industry and the World." Organizations in this sector call for technical, academic and employability skills to prepare business establishments to manage and serve customers, prepare food, plan events and work tasks in the sector include:

- communication
- planning experiences
- food safety
- event planning
- sales
- customer service
- lodging management
- meeting services
